The Standard Bearer. FROM THE GERMAN.

When floats the standard o'er the tented plain, His lonely watch the minstrel Knight is keeping, And thus beguiles the time with tuneful strain, His silver lute with mailed fingers sweeping.

" The ladve of my love I may not name; I cannot hope my love will be requited; Yet I will fight for Freedom and for Fame, Beneath the banner where my vows were plighted."

The night is gone; the battle comes with day; Behold the bard surrounding foes defying; Red carnage marks his progress through the fray, While still he sings amid the dead and dying; "The ladye of my love I must not name;

I dare not hope my love can be requited ; Then let me die for Freedom and for Fame, Beneath the banner where our yows were plighted."

The fight is won: Death, sated, quits the field; Yet still the faithful bard, while life is fleeting, Expiring, hes upon his gory shield,

This dying note with feeble voice repeating :

" The ladye of my love I did not name; In Heaven above we yet may be united; I fought, I fell for Freedom and for Fame, Beneath the banner where my vows were plighted."

[Correspondence of the Boston Commercial Bulletin.] Letter from the Oil Regions. SHAWMUT, Elk Co., Pa., ? 26th Oct., 1861. (

MR. EDITOR :- At this beautiful location (a name familiar to all Bostonians), I have two subjects which interest me much, and of which a description might not be uninteresting to your readers. They are-Coal, and Oil. The two would make too long a letter, so I will in this give you a short description of the oil regions, or some of the principal oil wells.

There has another excitement broke out on Oil Creek, and other localities are now all put in the shade by the light from this. You probably read the description of the flowing well that took fire last spring, and burned to death some twenty men that were standing about when it caught fire. Many thought the account then given all a hoax; but I can assure you every word was true. The amount of oil that flowed from that well was called fabulous; but when you hear of this new wellwhich is situated on Oil Creek, about four miles from its mouth, where it empties into the Alleghany river, on what is called the Tarr farm, and only about twenty-five rods from the famous flowing well called the Burnett well, on the Buchanan farmyou will perhaps believe the other account, if you do not this. Two weeks ago, yesterday, the men employed boring, or drilling, just at night, as they were about closing work for the day, the fire getting low under the boilers, they heard the gas beginning to escape, or, as they call it, "blowing," and in less than twenty minutes, and as soon as they could get their drills out the gas took fire, and a stream of oil and gas all on fire spirted up into the air from 200 to 300 feet-a jet of fire from four to five feet in size, and oil falling in liquid fire, together with the roar of gas escaping, made an awful sight. There were but six men at the time about the well, and they barely escaped with their lives, all being very badly burned. The jet of fire from the oil and gas spouting out of the well from 200 to 300 feet, burned for some four or five days. and could be seen from ten to twenty miles off. The way it was subsided was this: They piled on dirt from 20 to 30 feet base and from 15 to 20 feet high, forming a sort of mound-and even now it will break out through this mound of earth, and the fire will stream up from it in a dozen different jets all at the same time, and the smoke and gas rising from it reminds you of a large, old-fashioned

There are seven streams of oil that have burst out from the side next to the bank of the Creek. about one and-a-half inches, and it is thrown with such force that it actually spirts out from six to ten feet; and it is estimated that in twenty-four hours three thousand barrels of oil flow from the well. This may seem fabulous, but nevertheless it is true. The proprietor offered to fill 10,000 barrels for 25 cents per barrel, provided they were furnished immediately, as he was losing it all-he not being provided with barrels or tanks to store it;

There is a village of shanties (about 150,) and for ten days after this well took fire they did not allow any fires to be built in the vicinity.

There is another well on the Buchanan farm. called the Bennet well, which is a flowing well, and is within 40 rods of the one on the Tarr farm. This well flowed from 2,000 to 3,000 barrels every 24 hours for some time; but now it flows from 1,-000 to 1,200 barrels in 24 hours. There is also another flowing well near the same place that flows from 500 to 600 barrels in 24 hours.

The place so noted for Oil, called Tidioute, is not in so flourishing a state as last season, many having left for this new locality. It is something on the plan of California mining. As soon as new diggings are discovered they all flock to the new location; and so here. You can stand and count over 2,000 derricks in the town of Tidioute, where they have been drilling for oil; and it is stated as a fact that within a compass of 20 miles there are now standing 6,000 derricks. There is one interderricks. Tidioute looks like a forest of masts.

There have been employed the past season over 2,000 teams drawing oil, &c., to the railroad, and empty barrels back, and goods. At the present time there are from 1,000 to 1,200. The roads are so bad it is almost impossible to get over them, and if a horse get down it is hard work to get him up. One horse was drowned in water and mud a few days ago. You have no conception of the roads. They have an organized police to keep the teams all straight, or the streets would be blockaded up so quick there would be no passing. It is not uncommon to stand and count from 50 to 100 teams at a time, all in a line. The hotels, as they call them, are full to overflowing, and it takes the uninitiated a long while to get a sight at the table. When the bell rings at meal times you would think the whole rebel army was making a rush for the

The whole county is in a perfect California excitement. As for war news or any other news but oil they care nothing. It is claims, wells, and oil. The smell of gas is almost unendurable. One can form no idea of the state of things here unless present. Where this will end others must tell, I

FIRE AND WATER PROOF .- The Emperor and Empress of France were lately present at the trial of a fire-proof, dress, invented by M. Bouvert. The dress is described to be both water-proof and fire-proof, and is copiously stuffed with sponges sewn together. He wears a helmet like that of a diver, with an apparatus for supplying fresh air, and glasses to see through. At a signal from the Emperor, he set fire to the temporary cottage, and when the flames had well got ahead he went into the midst of them several times with perfect impunity. The Empress, greatly excited by the scene, cried out repeatedly, "Enough; oh, it's quite entirely successful. Horseflesh Banquer .- At Algiers a few days back, a considerable number of high public functionaries, superior military officers, judges and clergy, partook in the saloon of the theater of a grand banquet, the greater part of the dishes of which were composed of horse and ass flesh. The object in getting up the feast was to combat the prejudice against such food. The different dishes were dressed in the French style, and declared excellent. . One of them consisted of a young ass roasted whole. After the dinner, suitable toasts and speeches were delivered. One of the latter was by M. Decroix, Veterinary Surgeon of the 1st mounted Chasseurs, who maintained that horseflesh is very nutritious, and that the general adoption of it as an article of food would present many advantages .- Galignani.

Whaling-Past and Present.

A most feeling remark was that made by the old Scotch dame, when she heard that gas was introduced and soon likely to supersede all other means for illuminating our darkness-" What will become of the puir whales!" Certainly it had, until within the last few years, become a matter of doubt as to what had become of the monster mammalia-the whaling fleet having been gradually growing " small by degrees and beautifully less," and it was left to the imagination to picture what the whales were doing in the icy envrions of the North, roaming about the deep unmolested, moving untapped mines of wealth. Steam, however, has been introduced into the whaling business, and we may expect to see added to the whaling fleet, year by year, smart and stoutly built screw steamerseach armed with a ram, not for the purpose of running down either an enemy or a whale, but for clearing the way through icefields and other extremely cold inconveniences. The following very interesting particulars we take from the Hull Adver-

"Our whalers, with steam and other advantages to boot, get no such catches as were taken in the olden time. Take the year 1814, when the total catch of the 143 British ships was about 20,000 tons, or that of the following year, when the Hull ships alone got 7,986 tons, exclusive of black oil; or the whole series of years from 1813 to 1830years in which there was scarcely one losing scason; or the longer period, from 1795 to 1830, when the yearly catch was almost an unbroken chain of success, when the ships seldom returned with less than 100 tons per vessel, and when there was not so much as one decidedly bad year, and we obtain some notion how it happened that then, London had at one time a whaling fleet of twenty ships, and that the Hull Polar squadron rose from three ships in 1779 to sixty-three ships in 1807. So successful were those early fishings, that in spite of the number of whalers 'captured' on their return by French and American privateers, the total of the British fishing ships grew from humble beginnings to a list of about 150 vessels. The fishing fleet of to-day is but a scant remnant-a mere wreck of its former self; and it is so because of its discouraging influence of a series of had years, which began in 1834, and continued until the owners and men, who, deceived by their previous almost unvarying success, had spent their money as lucky gold diggers with lavish hand, deserted the business. Instead of catching whales, the ships themselves were frozen in, were kept with their crews fighting with scurvy and starvation, through the long, dismal, almost hope-deserted night of an Arctic winter. In 1833 Dendee lost two out of nine ships, and had only eleven fish among the remaining seven; while Hull had eight out of thirty-three vessels 'clean.' In 1835 Hull lost five out of twenty-three vessels; and the London vessels had either no fish or only one or two each. In 1836 Hall had eight ships out of fifteen empty; Peterhead, seven out of eleven empty; Dundee, five empty; Kirkcaldy, four out of five empty; and Montrose, all empty. The years 1837. 1839 and 1840, were almost equally bad. This was most discouraging. So rapidly did a few losing years reduce the whaling fleet that in 1842 Hull sent, instead of her sixty ships, two; Dundee, instead of her nine, three; Newcastle, instead of her six, one; and London, Grimsby and Liverpool gave up the business altogether. In 1841 the Dundee dron was reduced to two solitary ships.

commencing with 1830, the decidedly bad years have been about one in three, and a perusal of the whaling records shows that the moderately good years have also been about one in three, and the greatly good years in the same proportion; the successes in these latter years being generally so great as to give a good return of profit for all the years, good, bad and indifferent. The use of the screw, first introduced into the whaling trade in '57 by Captain Gravel, will give greater steadiness to the annual yield. The steamship Camperdown acted as a steam-ram this season, running full tilt at the field-ice, then lacking and running again, until she had burst for herself a watery lane to the fishing ground. Dundee has the advantage of being the only port as yet possessed of a full steam fleet; and, from her success, we may look to the probable gradual withdrawal of all but steam whalers from the Polar fisheries."

Severe Punishment.

The following half comic, half tragic misadventure is related in the Roman correspondence of an English newspaper: "Whilst the extreme penalty of the law (the execution of Locatelli) was being carried into effect on the Piazza del Cerchi, under the superintendence of the Roman judicial authorities, a sentence less physically severe, but perhaps more morally so, was being put in force by the French military authorities against two officers of the 71st Regiment, on the Piazza de Popolo, for having, by their culpable negligence, been instrumental to the mutilation of their regimental flag. It appears that the Captain and Lieutenant in command of the detachment on guard at the Piazza di San Pietro, before the Pope's palace, had allowed two ladies, not of ancient Roman virtue, to pay them a visit in the apartments over the guard-room allotted to officers on duty there, and to which there was access by a private door. Whilst they were enjoying the society of these nymphs, another officer called at the guard-house, and the Captain and Lieutenant, unwilling to let the new comer into the mysteries of the little room up stairs, came down to him, walked with him on the piazza, and sat val of some 400 acres, on which stands over 600 cdown in the cafe for some time. But the Ariadnes they had abandoned, finding time hang heavy on their hands, as usual in such cases, began to examine the moveables in the room, and especially the principal ornament it contained, viz : The regi mental flag kept there by the detachment on guard. to be duly presented and waved every time His Holiness passed the Piazza to or from the Vatican. Cupidity thrilled through their frail frames as they handled the bullion tassels, and the solid gold Solferino medal appended to the tattered banner. The ladies respected the rags, but abstracted the golden appendages thereto, and with this stolen booty decamped hastily by the back stairs. But who will not pity the woe-begone Captain and Lieutenant as they bore back the bereaved banner to the Colonel's quarters on the following morning. The court-martial before which they were tried sentenced the Captain and Lieutenant to be degraded and sent to the bagne at Toulon, the former for five years, and the latter, to whose especial keeping the flag was entrusted, for twenty years. Before carrying out the sentence it was forwarded to the Emperor for his approbation, the unfortunate Captain being a war-worn veteran decorated with five medals, and on the point of obtaining his majority; but Napoleon, although his own career might have reminded him that ' Nemo omnibus horis sapit,' was disposed to look on the case with severity, and confirmed the sentence-let us hope for the sake of example and discipline, but with the intention of subsequently mitigating or entirely remitting it. When the painful ceremony took place, the Cap-tain exhibited such emotion that he is strictly watched lest he should wipe out his disgrace by suicide, as he has expressed himself determined to

How to Avoid Duns .- The Wolverines are a smart set of people, very. They have a little village down on the banks of the Detroit river, near Windsor, Canada West, which they call their metropolis. Here there are several merchants who live by supplying the wants of the small traders throughout the State. These merchants have suffered somewhat from the depression of the times along back, and some of them have found themselves unable to pay their debts. Creditors are usually very clamorous in precisely such emergencies, and their visits are anything but agreeable. To avoid these annoyances, the aforesaid merchants have hit upon a very cute, though not altogether novel experiment. A very conspicuous card is printed and posted on the door of the merchant's residence, bearing the words "Small Pox Here!" Behind this impenetrable barrier the insolvent hides in perfect security from duns.

It is justly said of woman that she diminishes our sorrows and doubles our joys. Pity she quadruples our expenses.
